Joseph Smith was already an established collector, patron and art dealer before meeting and working with Canaletto around and had an active role supporting the leading publishing firm of Giambattista Pasquali. As such, it is no coincidence that Antonio Visentini's series of etchings, Prospectus Magni Canalis Venetiarum, all taken from Canaletto's paintings, was printed by Pasquali in and, in a second enlarged edition, in . It is probable that Canaletto began printmaking around this first publication in and that he may have even collaborated with Visentini to bring the latter's ambitious project to conclusion; the paper on which Canaletto's proof states were printed, seems to come from the same stock on which Visentini's series was published, i.
